

Chapter 12: In a Parallel Universe Evil Speaks

Returning to the “Almost But for Luck and Skill” case study presentation:

“Thank Mr. Jones for your presentation your first hand knowledge of the intrigue that the government’s active investigation.

“I will continue the case study blending Mr. Jones’ contribution and the ‘play’ of the various US government agencies and personnel based upon the extensive debriefing and after action reports. Finally, since this is still an open investigation, a ‘most likely’ concluding closure will be postulated for your your consideration.

I continue with two gentlemen meeting again in an Edison, New Jersey office.

Two Gentlemen of Menace Meet to Discuss Progress:

The Second Gentleman concludes his status report on “Toppling the USA”. He concludes with the final page of his presentation displayed before First Gentleman.

USA Toppling: Status

- 1> Successfully deploying divergent science experts to divide and confuse a nation over the COVID-19 pandemic.
- 2> Leveraging the level of street unrest by funding mutually adversarial forces.
- 3> Multiplying the hungry hordes from South America over the border with our propaganda machine.
- 4> Heightening Inflation Fear and Stock Market bounces with well timed media releases and Internet whisper campaigns.
- 5> Enhancing media focus and union pressures on the supply chain stagnation.
- 6> Funding the forces of the January 6th disruption of the Constitutional Presidential Certification.
- 7> Turning the Afghan withdraw into a photo-op of monumental proportions.
- 8> Fermenting uncertainty nationally and among our allies on our response to foreign adversaries hostile moves and propaganda.
- 9> Successfully tested the ‘virtual citizen’ domination in the Georgia Senate election.

“Congratulations on a winning strategy. It looks like I will owe you a Bitcoin. I am beginning to see the old General Winfield Scott Anaconda Plan for winning the Civil War gone Internet-Social Media and Ten Second news chips. In other words your strategy employ blockade, divide, and a main thrust.

“Am I correct that the first bullets in your report are the blockade and the divide part?,” questions the First Gentleman.

“You are correct,” responds the second Gentleman.

“I appreciate the way you have exponentially taken the current push for “Voters Rights” in a whole new direction. The self-certification process of new registered voters with supporting receipts is a wide open back-door with your religious compound twist.

“How many ‘test’ virtual citizens did you create for the Georgia Senate election?”

“We were not greedy. We create just over 45,000 and allocated to both political parties. The few that were rejected, have since been appealed and are now on the voter rolls,” notes the Second Gentleman.

“We missed the ‘mark’ in the Georgia Senate race. We were shooting for 51/49 split so the House and Senate could fight more in public. But it looks like the final outcome worked almost as well.”

“Do you actually have the in-state and out-of-state parishes still active?”

“Yes they are still active. Our religious order holds property title to the thirteen parcels we use as parishes,” answers the Second Gentleman.

“Finally, I know the program was create in the US. But from were does the application run and where does the backend reside?”

“The operational front-end and back-end are physically located in Montenegro. The US and Montenegro do not have any extradition treaty in effect at the moment. Technical support is contracted for hardware and software out of Naples. There is nothing native to the US except the parishes which are managed for the religious order by a Cayman Island land development and management corporation.

“What’s the plan for the next couple of election cycles?” queries the First Gentleman.

“Do you really need or want to know?” retorts the Second Gentleman.

Then he plows forward, “As far as our long range plan, we are going to ‘ride’ this dog for a few cycles, gain some experience using the application, may be change an election result every once in a while. When we perceive someone getting too close, we will sell the application a few times just to heighten the excitement. It might bring a little revenue.”

“Have there been any issues directly resulting from this ‘thrust’?” , asks the First Gentleman.

“Yes.”

“Details, please.”

“Two programmers and a collateral person were removed from the project and given appropriate severance packages guaranteeing confidentiality. This event occurred very near the final ‘dotting of the i’ for the project. We were in system level acceptance testing at the time. What test issues needed modification were accomplished through compartmentalizing so additional hired contractors were unable to see the ‘vision’.”

“If an associated decided to upscale this project beyond just Georgia to say Texas, California, New York, etc. how long would it take to start building a voting population and begin to impact a state?” queries the First Gentleman.

“That would depend upon whether they have an election requirements similar to Georgia. See Georgia is more interested in increasing the number of people registered. They register and then washout anomalies. They also use mail-in ballots with requirements for a voters signature and two witnesses signature. If other states have a drop-off only requirement or a notary witness we would first need to change the state law by legislation or governor emergency degree. That could take a longterm, controlled 'social justice' movement to build. That might add a year if the public sentiment needs to be changed.

"Best case we can scale an operation for a state with an election process similar to Georgia in a few days to modify and install a new version. We have to lock the door and cater pizza for the programming team. We would also need a team of property hounds looking to purchase or even rent saw six parishes with three inside and three out-of-state. So give me two months from 'go' to first newly registered member of our religious order.

"If I have to change the state legislative processes it will take a bit longer to find 'champions of our version of voters' rights". That would be a longer term project of at least a year.

"But up-scaling is feasible regardless of the state picked," concludes the Second Gentleman.

"Have you or your team thought about how we might parse a states voting history and statistics into statistical models to help us selected states and even voting districts?" asks the First Gentleman.

"We hired a couple of graduate students to run simulations and generate statistical safe guards to keep our registration numbers 'in the grass'. We do not want to alert authorities to the reality that their process is being subverted. We must stay under the alert threshold or be ready to close-up shop at the first whisper of an alert."

"Thank you for your great work and devotion to the cause," closes the First Gentleman. "I will obtain approval for progress payment for your team. We will need to sit down soon to see if we have any specific targets we want to embellish or eliminated. What do you say to February-March?"

"February-March is good on my calendar. I will keep my calendar flexible for that period."

"Then I think is is time to go to supper. Shall we," ends the First Gentleman.

As they walk down the corridor leaving the meeting the First Gentleman asks, "Are you still kayaking on the along the Potomac,"

Walking briskly the Second Gentleman responds, "Sure'm. It is the only peace and exercise I get. Do you want to join me sometime?"

"Well I will think about it. Here is the elevator. How's Marge?"

Three hours later, in a heavily encrypted conversation bounces over the airwaves.

"Our pawn continues to advance with the gambit's main thrust," reports the First Gentleman. One bishop is down and ready for a rook, knight or other bishop. We can sweep the whole board and go into checkmate upon approval.

"We can add a checkers table as well.

"Three minor issues, but they were resolved

“We await your approval of the progress payment A, B, C, D, E, F, and/or G. We already have H in the bag.

“Well done! Let’s use progress payment plans A through G. Nice job,” states the Top Predator.
“Will that have all seven operational by November, 2022?”

“I will push the pawn for an estimate for going live with that target. ”
